TEACHING IN AN ANGLICAN SCHOOL – STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES

Anglican Schools take seriously the needs of the whole person, that is, their spiritual, physical, intellectual, social, emotional, aesthetic and moral needs. Such a stance reflects a Christian view of the nature of people and the need to affirm the particular gifts and abilities of each person.

Anglican schooling encourages students to think and reason as well as to participate in the available curricula and to deepen relationships with others and the national environment.

It is the intention that Georgiana Molloy Anglican School makes available caring Christian education to as wide a cross-section of the community as possible. All students are valued whatever their background, socio-economic status or their abilities might be.

Anglicanism has a capacity to hold together a diversity of Christian belief and practices as well as having a strong thread which celebrates 'humanness'.

Anglicanism maintains continuity with the past in its liturgies, its adherence to the historic creeds, and its Episcopal and Synodical form of policy while retaining a capacity to be responsive to its cultural and contemporary context.

At Georgiana Molloy Anglican School the moral dimensions of education find a significant place in the curriculum, and substantial resources are directed to this and staff and students are encouraged to explore Christian faith, and practice and to develop a value system for their own lives which give expression to such faith and practice.
